Alicia F. Lieberman, Ph.D. holds the Irving B. Harris Endowed Chair of Infant Mental Health in the UCSF Department of Psychiatry, where she is also Professor and Vice Chair for Academic Affairs. She is Director of the Child Trauma Research Program, San Francisco General Hospital and clinical consultant with the San Francisco

Human Services Agency. Born and raised in Paraguay, she received her B.A. from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and Ph.D. from The John Hopkins University. This national and cultural background informs her work on behalf of children and families from diverse ethnic and cultural origins. Her major interests include infant mental health, disorders of attachment, child-parent interventions with families experiencing multiple adversities, the effects of trauma and domestic violence in the first years of life, and treatment outcome research with traumatized young children and their parents. She is the lead developer of Child-Parent Psychotherapy, an evidence-based, culturally informed treatment for traumatized young children and parents that is disseminated nationally and internationally.
