

NFI Vermont Presents:

Relational Mindfulness and Playful Techniques for Effectively Engaging Youth in School-based and Clinical Settings

A day of mindful engagement & laughter with Joe Klein and Jessica Morey from Inward Bound Mindfulness Education

Friday, December 5th, 2014

8:30am - 4:30pm | The Inn at Essex (The Essex Resort & Spa)

70 Essex Way, Essex VT 05452 | (802) 878-1100 | www.essexresortspa.com

This workshop is designed for professionals to learn fun and effective techniques for sharing mindfulness skills with youth in school-based and clinical settings. Joe and Jessica will share strategies used to engage youth on the iBme Teen Retreats. They will offer creative and innovative interventions garnered from years of school-based mindfulness education and individual and group therapy with children and adolescents.

iBme staff have been sharing these dynamic techniques with professionals who work with youth on residential Retreats, as well as in schools, mental health and juvenile facilities. Their secular residential mindfulness retreats, held annually in California, Washington, Virginia, Colorado and New England allow youth to engage, connect and go deeper in the practices of mindfulness and authentic relationship. For many youth, these retreats are transformative experiences where they build a toolkit to deal with stress and anxiety and for improving relationships with peers, parents and themselves.

Of special note is the game Joe created for kids with ADHD called Not Paying Attention, which will be shared during this workshop and is a valuable tool if you work with hyperactive kids. Participants will also be taught The Five Senses Tool, for helping youth learn an effective way to cope with anxiety and panic attacks. The iBme Lightening Rounds activity is a very effective technique to quickly create a sense of connection, belonging and trust when doing small group work with youth. Classroom-based mindfulness activities will also be shared for elementary, middle and high school settings.
